GREAT DIVIDE WATERFALL
The historic High Level Bridge is an 8,000 ton steel monument studded together by 1.4 million rivets.

Completed in 1913, the bridge has been used as a railway, tramway, roadway, and sidewalk across the North Saskatchewan River. It is almost a half mile (755 metres) in length and the height from water level to the bottom of the rails is 53 metres.

In 1980, a man-made waterfall was turned on for Alberta's 75th Anniversary. The cascade from the High Level Bridge is best viewed downstream on the southside of the river. Tentative operating dates for the Great Divide Waterfall are Victoria Day, Canada Day, Sourdough Raft Race Day, Heritage Day, and Labour Day (weather permitting).

HISTORY & HERITAGE

An era of exciting growth is certainly not new for Edmonton. Since the city's earliest days, men have come in search of wealth — first in furs, then gold, then land, and finally, oil.

Edmonton's beginnings can be traced to the lucrative fur trade which brought early explorers west. In the summer of 1795, the North West Company erected Fort Augustus near the present Fort Saskatchewan. In October of that year, William Tomison established a neighbouring trading post, on the present city site, for the fiercely competitive Hudson's Bay Company, and a prosperous fur trade was begun. The settlement was named Fort Edmonton because Edmonton, England was the birthplace of Sir James Winter-Lake, then deputy governor of the Hudson's Bay Company. By 1826, this Fort had become the main stopping point on the routes to the North and the Pacific coast.

When the Hudson's Bay Company sold its governing rights to the new Dominion of Canada in 1869, vast tracts of land were made available for purchase. A steady influx of settlers began, and in 1892, Edmonton became a town.

With the railroad came more settlers and prospectors heading for the riches of the Klondike gold fields. The population of the city grew rapidly as many of these people stayed on to homestead after the gold rush ended.

By 1904, Edmonton's population had grown to such an extent that the town attained the status of a "city". When Alberta joined the Confederation of Canada the following year, Edmonton was chosen the new provincial capital. During the next ten years, a speculative land boom swelled the city's population one hundred fold.

Edmonton emerged from the Great Depression as a pioneer in the aviation industry, and a centre of trade and transportation. The exploits of the early aviators have since been recognized with the location of Canada's Aviation Hall of Fame in Edmonton.

It was the discovery of oil, at nearby Leduc in 1947, which firmly established Edmonton's future prosperity. Now the hub of activity for Alberta's extensive energy and other resource industries, Edmonton has assumed an increasingly important role in the future of Canada.
